"THE JUGGLER DE NOTRE DAME" (THE JUGGLER OF OUR LADY)

Undoubtedly many fans in the area are convinced that the Notre Dame nickname, the Jugglers, derives from our teams' ability in handling the ball on the football field and/or basketball court. This, however, is not so.

When Brother Hilary, the school's first principal, and the other brothers were considering possible nicknames for the new school in the late fifties, athletic ability was of secondary concern. Instead, what they were seeking was a name that they hoped would both typify and exemplify all that they desired a Notre Dame student to be. Many names were pondered until, ultimately, their attention was brought to the French Medieval legend of "le Joueur de Notre Dame (the Juggler of Our Lady)."

The story went as follows:

"Once there was a very talented juggler who was tired of wandering up and down the many roads of France and decided that it would be better if he were to dedicate his life to God, as a monk. He entered a monastery with which he was familiar and was quite happy. Now it was the custom of this monastery to do things in honor of the Blessed Mother. One monk would write poetry, another sculpt statues, and another paint and so on. The juggler could do nothing like this and gradually became quite despondent. Then suddenly he was happy again and the prior noticed that he would disappear every day for about an hour. He wondered what the juggler was doing and followed him. The juggler went to the chapel and proceeded to do all of his juggling tricks in front of the statue of Our Lady before the horrified eyes of the worthy prior. He ran and got the abbot to see the sacrilege that was being committed in the chapel. But when they both started up the aisle to stop the juggler, they saw that statue come to life and Our Lady wipe the sweat off the brow of the juggler."

The moral of the story is quite simple. If you do the best you can, God will be pleased. In choosing this as our nickname, we hope that all of Our Lady's jugglers here at Notre Dame will have the same inspiration to do their best.
